TUESDAY, MAY 29, 1877.

Mr. Beecher's Last Sunday's Sermon. Rev. Henry Ward Beecher, in Plymouth Church, Brooklyn, last Sunday, said :- If you will take notice human life goes through an unfolding series perpetually. All human life is working away from the material to the spiritual. In each development we rise little by little, and reach God at last, as represented to us through the Lord Jesus Christ. In this development we rise not only step by step, but each step we take is in the direction of the right. The child has a right to bread, but the alone. As the child rises to manhood his ideal enlarges and he sees the more complex relations of his life. He sees their subtlety and their intricacy. The moment any man sees any great truth he has a right in that truth. A man identifies himself with the truth; it be comes part of the emotion, part of the will No man has any right to withhold it from him. So, then, men are large in proportion as they come into the knowledge of God and into com-munion with God himself. It is in this sense with every side of the universe, either pascent, undeveloped or developed. There are, there fore, no assignable bounds for man, either in this life or that which is to come. Men are great, therefore, not by what they are in themselves, but by associating themselves in all the divine movements and currents of the universe. Hence all men that are working for selfishness, for pride, for the lower life, for the animal, work away from true greatness. It is not the man, then, who holds these things for material ends that is the great man. It is the conception that generates the spiritual, the ineffa ble that shall give permanency to the greatness of men. Who, then, comes into God's spirit

It this be so, then we have a gauge by which we can measure the forces and the dangers of comes into sympathy with universal being.

sects or the organizations by which men mould themselves into seets. The historic Church has been a Church under the law of the flesh. The churches do not represent the ineffable, the supernatural, the divise. They have not even the ideal conception. The alabaster may be there, but there is very little of the precious ointment. If you were to exclude the household from the world religion would be begging in less than a generation. Each seet thinks it is so much nearer right than the other that it thinks it right to warn its children of that other sect. If you are going to have a historic church why not go to Rome at once? We have a true history, say the Romanists. The Congregationalists say if you want liberty come to us. The Presbyterians say if you want strict government come to us. The Unitarians if you want unity come to us. The sects have all got their own little bit of truth, and they all say they have the whole of it. Sects that are appropriating and are building up that which is peculiar to themselves are not properly instructed in the text, "All things are yours." Neither is there any form of worship that I have not a right to. I have never preached a sermon during forty years against Catholies and I never intend to do so. When I was a man boy I made a covenant with myself that I would not quarrel with anybody whose face was set in the same direction as mine. Whatever that is good in that Church, in its worship, is Christ's and Christ is mine. There is no pilgrim that goes to Rome to do honor to Pius 1X, that will manifest more reverence (more reverence that is sensible) than I feel toward Him. Am I to set aside the great Church of the Orient because there are webs of error spun around it? Whatever there is in that Church that is good and true is mine. If you say that this is a mistake, that this is imaginative preaching, then I say that if there is such a being as Christ, such a being as God, then there is such a thing as a spiritual universe, and we are fitted for it by every door that will shut out sin from us. "There is a that will shut out sin from us. "There is a rest remaineth for the people of God." There are different organizations, different doctrines, yet there is a sense in which they are one; but it is a sense which they who support and hold them don't recognize.

A UNIQUE SWINDLE .- There is a man now residing in Eureka, Nevada, whose ambition and boast is that he can beat anybody's little game. Some years ago, when the small-pox scare was agitating the citizens of Pioche, our hero, who was in an impecunious condition. seedy, and broke, conceived and put into exacution a stratagem that succeeded admirably in filling his pockets and adorning his back. Letting a confederate into his confidence-another of the same ilk-he precured a vial of croton oil, retired to his room, and, by repeated applications, brought out a first-class eruption en his face and body. The confederate reported the case, and he was immediately removed to the pest house, and his chum, who kindly volunteered, was appointed nurse at a salary of $10 per day. They were the only occupants of the institution, and managed to while away thirty days of coforced seclusion, with the aid of sundry delicacies and nourishing diet. At the expiration of thirty days the nurse reported a complete care of the sick man, and boasted that under and by reason of the strict attention paid by him to the patient, not a pit or sear marred his features. A new suit of clothes was provided for both, the $300 paid for attendance, and they left town on the next stage, boasting, when at a safe distance, of their smartness and talent in "beating the pest house game." RAPID SALES
